PLAYTIME

KELLY KITTEN and Kippy Kitten liked better than anything else in the world to play cowboys-'n-Indians. Kelly liked to tie a gun and holster around himself to be the Cowboy. Kippy liked to tie a feather-band around his head to be the Indian. Then they would whoop and holler. Kelly would shoot his gun—bang! And Kippy would aim his bow-and-arrow—swish!

But there was only one trouble . . .

"We need horses!" said Kelly Kitten, the cowboy.

"Yep, you're right, we sure do!" Kippy the Indian agreed. "But what'll we use for horses?"

"Well, we'll just have to find two other animals who like to play cowboys-'n-Indians as much as we do. Then they'll be glad to play horses, and gallop into battle and jump over the corral fences and all that stuff."

First Kippy and Kelly Kitten went next door and asked Paul and Peter Poodle if they would like to be horses. Paul yawned. Peter yawned. "We just like to rest," they said.

So Kippy and Kelly went further on down the street until they came to the home of Terry Tomcat and his cousin Tom. "Want to play with us?" they asked.

"Play what?" said Terry and Tom.

"Cowboys-'n-Indians. You be our horses to ride over the Texas plains to catch the rustlers who—"

"Just a minute, just a minute," interrupted the tomcats. "When we play that game, we like to do the riding. We'll play if you guys will be the horses for us to ride."

"But . . . but . . . we're too small. You'd squash us."

"Take it or leave it," announced the big tomcats.

So the kittens left it. They continued around the block to the Scotties' house. Sam and Sid Scotty listened as the kittens explained about how they needed horses for their game. Then Sam and Sid Scotty replied, "You'd get our fur all mussed up, sitting on us. And we might have to gallop through mud, and even fall down in it. No. Too messy."

Kelly and Kippy were getting very discouraged. Golly, they wondered, wasn't there anybody left in the whole neighborhood who liked to really play rough? Was everybody a lazybones or a sissy? But just as they were about to give up, two voices called out, "Hey, you kittens! Wanna play cowboys-'n-Indians?"

Kippy and Kelly were so delighted that they almost hugged the two puppies that came running up to them. And they were even more delighted when the two puppies said, "You two can be cowboys and Indians if you want to, but what we like to be is horses!"

They began to play, but alas . . . there was still one more trouble. The puppies were dachshunds, long and skinny and very close to the ground. When the kittens jumped up on their backs the dachshunds low bodies were too close to the ground. They were so low that they scraped along! They couldn't gallop; they were too close to the ground to move! All four of the pals began to get discouraged again, until, suddenly, Kelly had a bright idea.

"Hey!" he yelled. "Let's borrow some rollerskates from somebody. That'll fix us up fine!"

"Say—that's a sharp idea! We're good skaters!"

So, in a few minutes, Kelly returned with the skates. The others helped strap the skates to the dogs' feet. Soon, off they galloped, with the two kittens whooping and hollering, "Giddyap! Ride 'em, cowboy!"
